Dear Sir or Madam,

I object to the assessment of my 2023 income tax return. In July 2023, I moved with my family from Vancouver, BC, to Edmunston, NB, for a new job. During this move, we encountered an unexpected situation where our car overheated, necessitating a side trip to Banff for repairs. As a result, we incurred additional expenses for gas, car repair, lodging, and meals, which I included in my Form T-1, Moving Expenses, on my 2023 income tax return. These expenses were essential and directly related to the move. I have enclosed a copy of my July 23, 2024, notice of reassessment for your reference.

I would be pleased if you could reconsider the assessment and acknowledge the legitimacy of these necessary expenses.

Statement of Facts:

1. My name is James Doe and I live at 123 Main Street, Edmunston, NB, E3V 1A1.
2. In July 2023, I moved with my family from Vancouver, BC, to Edmunston, NB, for a new job.
3. On my 2023 income tax return, I submitted Form T-1, Moving Expenses, and included a side trip to Banff with the following costs: gas + car repair = $478.75, lodging: $175, meals: $205.50.

4. A side trip to Banff was necessary as a result of my car overheating during the move and needing repair.

5. As the car was being repaired, my family needed lodging, so we stayed at a local hotel for one night.

6. We also needed meals for the duration of the stop.

7. I object to my 2023 income tax return and enclose a copy of my July 23, 2024, notice of reassessment.

8. Today's date is July 23, 2024.
